Dear Randall:

I ran into about half a dozen people the evening after you spoke at the American Chamber breakfast. Each of them recounted how they not only enjoyed your presentation that morning, but how they had had a great day. All attributed their great day – focused, productive, satisfying – to spending an hour with you. Thinking about creativity, and having a whale of a time doing it, somehow spilled over to the rest of their work day.

Randall, it's not often we have a speaker at Am Cham who can create waves of laughter among our membership, but even rarer to have a speaker, anywhere, who so dramatically and so immediately improves what he's set out to talk about. The delight of the audience in experiencing the freedom of their increased creativity was palpable during the last group exercise.

Thanks, again, for taking the time to address Am Cham. I can guarantee people will be talking about your appearance for a long time to come. (To say nothing of the mysterious increase in the sale of plastic eggs in Singapore.)

Sincerely,
